enlarged vessel, and they did not disagree." "In reliance upon" that conversation, the brief continued, Marr purchased a 38' vessel.

The next week, on June 13, Marr was denied a mooring before the Cohasset Harbor Study Commission because he didn't earn 85 percent of his livelihood as a fisherman and that he had enlarged his vessel in violation of harbor regulations. On June 18, Marr moored his 38' boat at his assigned mooring, the brief stated. Subsequently Marr received the certified letter from Ritter on June 25 ordering him out of the harbor within 72 hours.

Marr contended that the harbor bylaws "were designed to economically strangle the fishing community and are not based upon authenticated information or statistics collected by a reputable body." He further charged that the purpose of the bylaws was to "discriminate against commercial fishermen" as well as "intention to close off the commercial area to new fishermen and regulate the size of the fishing vessels thereby making fishing economically unfeasible."

Mooring and harbor regulations amendments were accepted by Selectmen last 1978 which, in part, limited the size of the fishing fleet to the harbor's capabilities for efficient operations. Harbor-master Ritter said that there is no room for another 38' boat in the harbor at all, and that Marr's 30' mooring can't accommodate the larger vessel.

Ritter has been unable to moor a 32' Pacemaker, owned by Harry Silvia, on its mooring of 12 years because of flows in the harbor at low tide, which could cause congestion and collision of boats in the area of Marr's mooring, he said. Silvia's boat is now on a 34' lobsterboat mooring in a section of the harbor bordering the commercial area.

Cohasset's contribution to Red Sox baseball has been indirect, Clark said, but of eminent importance. Bill Enos, an Elm Street resident, for one, is a successful Red Sox scout, and just off Jerusalem Road lives Ken Coleman, Red Sox radio broadcaster, one of the greatest in the game, Clark attested.

Clark, himself, played baseball as a pitcher at Browne and Nichols of Cambridge and Roxbury Latin School. He has a baseball scholarship offer from Dartmouth, but he went to Harvard and became a heel-to-toe race walker. He, incidentally, did play on a Cohasset softball team back in the 30's when "Hot" Sullivan was the captain and pitcher.

Here are a few quiz questions from Red Sox Fever! — they should try the most confident trivia nut:

—In 1968, which Red Sox outfielder fielded a perfect 1.000?

—Name the last three team members to the selected MVP.

—Which Boston pitcher hit a home run in the first game of the 1967 World Series?

—Through season 1978, has Carlton Fisk or Bob Montgomery worn the Boston uniform for more seasons?

—Which active Red Sox pitcher though 1978 has the most wins for the club — Dennis Eckersley, Dick Drago, Bob Stanley, or Mike Torrez? How many?
